Hello All:

Please pass on and, if interested, drop a line as requested below.

An interesting historic you tube video is below -- exact same training program that George Quick, Mike McCormack, Mike Rodriguez and I received.. same extra duty obligations... Note the diversity of the crowd.. not much change there either!

Best to all,

Don

•This branch has not received proper recognition over the years and entering the historic district into the National Register of Historic Places would provide this unique opportunity to bring awareness and potential adaptive reuse preservation to the site.

urge your Commission to unanimously and enthusiastically support this nomination.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Great historic video footage:

P.S. I was at the National Archives 2 in Maryland last Thursday and Friday researching the records group that pertained to the WWII U.S. Maritime Training Stations, and discovered that over 200 boxes were placed in a storage facility in 1951, but only 49 were brought over to the National Archives in 2003. Those boxes are all unprocessed, which means they have no specific identifying information listed in the records group. I requested to view the maximum number of boxes at a time (9) and pored through all the files during two full days at the archives. I was able to look through over 30 boxes. There were specific files about the Cadet Training Stations and the Officers Training Station at Fort Trumbull during WWII, except the one in Alameda. There were significant gaps in the sequence of the boxes. There were dozens of letters dating from 1946 asking the government to recognize the Merchant Mariners as veterans. See attachment of one of the letters.
